Mind Kombat August 4, 2018

Inter-House Mind Kombat was held with the motive to move and not stagnate in a quiet hall. Students from classes IV to XII participated. Every class had a participant from each of the four Houses. It was held in five steps with questions ranged from General Knowledge, Audio and Video, and Pictorial. It was more or less like the question answer sessions broadcast over the TV channels. The questions appeared on the screen and the participant who pressed the button first got to answer the question. If the answer was incorrect then the next class would get the chance to answer. Students were keen to press the buzzer as soon as they heard the question. Questions would be passed on to the next contestant when the one who had to answer failed to give the right answer. The Chief Guest for this programme was Mr. Arun Prasad Vahi, the founder of Digital India. He was presented with a bouquet and the programme started with a prayer to the Almighty. The guardians were mesmerized by the quick alacrity of their children.

We have a question. This slogan is doing the rounds, "beti bachao beti padhao", which is really good. But who shall give them the security and safety they really need? When shall we stop hearing about the shameless happenings of offences and violence against women? Right from the time they are born to their advanced age they are victimized brutally. It seems more rampant now. Or was it always like this except that in the past we did not have an alert media. If you are trying to save them so that they live, assure them that they will live a safe life with dignity. "Beti Bacho, beti padhao, par beti ki suraksha/hifazat ka kya hoga?"
